PREFACE

COLLECTED JOURNALS #3, continues my project of converting my journals into book form. As stated in my two previous collections, I've lifted from the pages of each of my previous journals those increments of thought which most resonate for me, recording these statements on the last page of each journal. At the conclusion of each journal I capture those thoughts and convert them into a multi-voiced poem, identified by the journal's number. So this book and books to follow will contain these compositions. At the conclusion of each poem I will show the dates during which that particular journal was recorded. The date of the poem, itself, may be some time later.

As with most of my poetry, these compositions are as much music as poetry, containing the most important elements of music: pitch, tempo, dynamics and rhythm which is the heartbeat of language. And they are constructed from the major forms of music: fugues, crab-fugues, rondos and counterpoint.

To be fully realized they should be read aloud by the number of voices indicated. I've omitted tempo and dynamic directions, leaving those decisions to you, the performers, for personal interpretations vary, and there is no 'wrong' way. The rhythms of your reading should unfold naturally, products of the form and language. Dashes indicate a period of silence and cannot be overstated. Parentheses indicate a theme is moving backwards or borrowed from another voice.
